L. F. Vosburgh, general passenger agent for all New York Central lines, was examined at length by C. C. Paulding. counsel for the railroad, concerning the average rate per mile for commuters on the Central and on other commuter carrying lines. He testified that since July 1. 1910, the average rate on the Hudson division has been 4.89 mills, on the Harlem division 5 14 and on the Putnam division 5.23. He said that the average on the Pennsylvania for Philadelphia ommuters was 7.95 mills and that the Chicago and Northwestern charged its commuters 5 47 mills, while the Boston commuters 5 47 mills, while the Boston and Albany got as high as 8.12. Mr. Vosburgh was sure that the Central's commuters fared very well as compared with those of other lines running into New York. The Central's average was 5.08, as compared with the Erie's average of 5.41, the Pennsylvania's 4.35, the New Haven's 5.18 and the Long Island's 5.17. Commissioner Decker pointed out that the tables made out by the railroad seemed to show that the road had lost money between 1905 and 1910 "on account of the increase in rates." Mr. Vosburgh thought that the loss was due partly to the extension of subways and the building of trolley lines. The commuter traffic to Vorkers and vicinity had been failing off steadily since 1907, he said.

Colertage Hart, counsel for a Peekswill commuter, asked the witness if it wasn't true that the roads with which he had compared the Central landed their commuter.
